- World Immunization Week (24th – 30th April)

These holidays are observed annually, not only to raise awareness of diseases but also to bring people together to promote good health. Instead of merely exploiting the environment, SVCN actively participates and organizes events to maintain and improve it. On World Environment Day, the students at our institution plant trees. The planted trees are cared after by the students.

We often host blood donation camps on our campus and raise awareness of blood donation among students. Along with the educators, our pupils attend blood donation camps and provide blood donations. As a medical team, our students volunteer at this camp and assist in gathering information, determining weight and hemoglobin levels, keeping track of vital signs, and caring for blood donors as they recuperate from their blood donation. Additionally, we organize annual health clinics for all class IV female employees to avoid cervical and breast cancer. With the aid of NGOs, free health examinations are set up for them.

3.4.4.1 THE INSTITUTION CELEBRATES/ORGANIZES NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL DAYS, EVENTS AND FESTIVALS UNDER N.S.S.

A large organization or government will typically choose a day for a national or international public health or ethical cause to be recognized on a special day or day of observation. This is done in order to remember, promote, and inspire action. Our nation has a number of notable individuals whose vision has helped us become a country that is welcoming to all cultures and religions, setting an example for the rest of the world in terms of Unity in Diversity. International Days of Importance are also observed in an effort to develop in students responsible, conscious global citizens.
